ABSTRACT

In November 1982, questionnaires were sent to 1400 public, secondary school, academic, and special libraries in Massachusetts to determine their use of computers for various activities. Of the 778 respondents, 282 (36.2%) reported automation of some kind and an additional 105 (13.5%) indicated that they were planning some automation within a year. This document is a summary report of the study. It includes a matrix by function and by library, indicating the use of computers for acquisitions, cataloging, serials operations, production of union lists, indexing, circulation, maintenance of information and referral files, interlibrary lending, online searching of remote databases, direct patron use, word processing, administrative activities, and other activities. It also indicates whether a library plans to begin, change, or extend automated functions. The matrix is arranged alphabetically by municipality, with additional indexes by institution and by type of library provided. A description of study purposes and methodology and a brief analysis of findings are also provided. It is noted that complete survey findings have been entered into a computerized database, known as "Autosurv," on an Apple II+ microcomputer. The report concludes with a sample questionnaire, and instructions and a sample request form for obtaining further information on survey results using the "Autosurv" database. (ESR)

Introduction

The Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners is charged by statute with the development of the state's libraries. As part of the research, evaluation, planning, and assistance functions of the Agency, a study of the use of computers in library functions was conducted by agency staff at the end of 1982. The purpose of the study was threefold:

* to determine which library functions were being performed with the assistance of computers and in which libraries they were being performed, and further, to determine what systems or hardware/software configurations were in use to perform these functions

* to furnish reliable and current data for the Board of Library Commissioners to develop a plan for the networking of automated library and information services throughout the Commonwealth

* to provide an overview and information and referral service to librarians seeking to initiate or expand their automation efforts

This document is a summary report of that study. It is not the complete report. The results of the survey have been entered into a computerized database on the Board of Library Commissioners' Apple II+. The data analyses which were performed to produce this report were chosen because they provide general comparative data by type of library, by location, and by library function. More specialized questions can be answered by further searching of the database; librarians are urged to call or write the BLC with their specific inquiries.

It is hoped that this information will be updated on an annual basis. Your comments and questions will be of assistance in refining the methodology, format, and distribution of survey findings.

Methodology

A survey form to measure the extent of use of computers in various library functions was developed and refined in October 1982. The objectives of the survey were to determine: how many, which types, and which individual libraries within Massachusetts had automated some function(s); which functions were being performed with the aid of computers, and which hardware/software systems or vendors were being used to perform them; and whether individual libraries were making plans to begin or expand upon automation efforts within the year following the survey.

The last survey of library automation conducted by the BLC had been done in 1978. Since that time, the library data processing market had changed considerably in terms of products and pricing. The general data processing market had also changed a great deal with the enthusiastic acceptance of microcomputers. Attitudes of librarians, funding authorities, and library patrons also seemed to be becoming more receptive to the implementation of computers in libraries.

Survey forms were sent to all the public libraries in Massachusetts. Public and private academic libraries were also surveyed, using BLC in-house mailing lists. The Massachusetts Department of Education provided mailing lists to send surveys to all the public and private secondary schools in the Commonwealth. Special libraries were surveyed using a mailing list provided by the Route 128 Librarians Group and a directory listing provided by the Boston Chapter of the Special Libraries Association. Almost 1400 surveys were distributed Forms were sent to libraries on November 24, asking for a December 15 return.

As forms were returned they were hand tabulated and checked against the mailing lists. The forms from specific libraries were assigned a library-type category at this time, largely based upon the mailing list on which they were listed. This library-type was later re-evaluated according to new criteria, which are described in this report in Section 3: Index by Library Type. Printed copies of the returned survey forms were filed according to municipality.

During January 1983 a database structure was developed, using Ashton-Tate's dBASE II database management system, which runs under the CP/M operating system on the BLC's Apple II+. A sample file was entered, and refinements to the database structure were made in January and February. All returned surveys were entered into the "Autosurv" database during February and the first week of March. No surveys returned after February 28 have been entered into the database.

This report was generated during March using dBASE II and several dBASE application programs developed at the BLC. The narrative portions were written and printed using the WordStar word processing package. Camera-ready copy was produced using the BLC's NEC Spinwriter 7710. Copies of the report are being mailed to all survey participants who requested them and to selected library agencies throughout the region. Further searches of the database may be conducted upon request; refer to Appendix B: For More Information . . .

Summary

In November 1982, the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners surveyed 1400 libraries concerning their use of computers in various functions. Questionnaires were sent to public, school, academic, and special libraries. Seven hundred seventy-eight libraries responded by February 1983. For purposes of analyzing the extent of automation, we have assumed that, for the most part, those libraries that did not respond had no automation projects to report. Two hundred eighty-two libraries (36.2% of the 778 respondents) were automated in some degree at the end of 1982 and an additional 105 (13.5%) indicated that they were planning some automation within the year.

In the following analyses by type of library, some special collections in academic institutions have been counted as both academic and special libraries.

Special libraries showed the greatest level of automation, with 63.3% of the 199 respondents indicating that they used computers in some way in their libraries. Almost as high was the academic group, showing 62.2% of 111 respondents using some automation.

Public and school libraries revealed much lower use of computers than special and academic. Two hundred seventy-two of the 381 public libraries in Massachusetts responded to the survey. Of the public libraries answering the survey, 23.9% indicate some level of automation. Only 21.6% of the 241 secondary-level school libraries responding said that they were computerized to some degree.

The library functions that have been automated vary greatly by type of library. Cataloging is the activity most frequently automated in academic and in public libraries (88.4% of the automated academic libraries are using computers in cataloging, while 70.8% of the automated public libraries are doing so). Cataloging is a high priority in special libraries as well, with 54.0% of the automated special libraries having computerized the cataloging process. However, cataloging falls way down on the priority list for automation in school libraries: only 9.6% of the school libraries that are automated have computerized cataloging.

School libraries, on the other hand, have given highest priority to providing computers for their patrons' use (55.8% of the automated school libraries have introduced computers to their patrons), a service that is lower on the priority spectrum in other types of libraries. Only 17.4% of academic, 16.9% of public, and 8.7% of special libraries which are automated provide computers for use by their patrons.

All types of libraries mention word processing as a computerized activity that is often implemented in their libraries. 48.1% of the school, and 43.1% of the public libraries that are automated mentioned that they use word processing for at least general office functions, if not for specific library activities. 44.4% of automated special libraries and 36.2% of automated academic libraries use word processing.

Word processing is followed often in all types of libraries by management processes (accounting and budgeting, statistical reports and planning, scheduling, and electronic mail) as functions that have been automated. Given the interest in word processing and management as high priorities for automation, and given the apparent increase in the use of microcomputers and the wide availability of off-the-shelf software packages of this nature, we can speculate that these functions will be prime candidates for introducing currently non-automated libraries to computers in the future.

Circulation is an activity that seems to be a higher automation priority for public and school libraries than it is for academic and special libraries. Sixteen public libraries (24.6% of the automated public libraries) and 14 school libraries (26.9% of the automated school libraries) have computerized circulation systems, versus 13.0% of the academic libraries and only 6.3% of the special libraries.

Online searching of remote databases is another activity that shows a wide disparity in application between types of libraries. Fully 103 or 81.7% of the automated special libraries offer online searching, and academic libraries follow with 60.9% of those automated offering computerized literature searching. However, only 6.2% of the public libraries that have any computer use provide access to the national online databases, and a single school library (1.9%) uses computerized search services.

Statistics of computer use in all types of libraries can be expected to change rapidly. Two hundred sixty-eight of the libraries responding (34.4%) indicated that they will begin or extend automation within the year. 39.2% of these libraries currently report no use of computers at all. The others will be automating functions that were previously not automated or changing systems in functions that they have already reported as automated. 44.1% of the academic libraries will be starting or adding automation projects within the year; 39.2% of the special libraries will computerize; 34.4% of the school libraries, and only 27.2% of the public libraries show plans to automate.

Of libraries that are not currently automated, the rush to computerize is strongest among the schools. 30.2% of school libraries which do not now have computers will be purchasing or starting to use them within the year. 26.2% of the academic libraries not currently automated have plans to do so within a year, while 62.2% of the academic libraries already have some automation. Only 17.8% of the special libraries now without computer use will initiate computers within the year, but 63.3% of the special libraries responding already have some automation. Although 13.0% of the public libraries not currently automated also have plans to begin automation within the year, only 23.9% of all the public libraries responding are currently using computers.

A further check of the returned questionnaires indicates that 66 libraries of all types mention that they share in automation projects with 26 different consortia or cooperating groups. Some of the consortia are groups of relatively long standing and were originally formed to promote cooperation in areas that were not then nor are now necessarily seen as areas for automation. Other groups, such as C/W MARS, did establish automation projects congruent with or shortly after their formation. Clearly the costs of automation, the possibilities of expanding resources, and the desirability of sharing technical expertise support the likelihood of increased cooperative activity among libraries.

Section 1:

Automated Functions by Municipality

The following grid shows which functions have been automated by specific libraries and which libraries are planning to begin or extend any automation efforts in 1983.

The listing is arranged alphabetically by municipality, with Acton at the beginning, and Yarmouth at the end. Within municipalities, all reporting libraries situated in that municipality are listed alphabetically by institution name.

If a library uses computers in any given function, an "X" appears in the matrix under the function name. If that function has not been automated by a particular library, the corresponding area has been left blank.

Abbreviations for the functions are as follows:

ACQ = Acquisitions
CAT = Cataloging
SER = Serials Operations
UNL = Union Lists
NDX = Indexing
CIR = Circulation
I&R = Information & Referral Files
ILL = Interlibrary Loan
SRC = Online Searching of Remote Databases (BRS, DIALOG, etc.)
PAT = Patron Use (the library provides a microcomputer or computer terminal for direct use by its patrons)
W/P = Word Processing
MGT = Management & Internal Operations (including accounting and budgeting, statistical reports & planning, scheduling, and electronic mail)
OTH = Other Uses not specified above (some other uses include in-house database maintenance, audiovisual scheduling, etc.)
FTR = Future (if the library indicated plans to begin automation, to make changes in a particular automated function, or to extend automation to more functions, an "X" will appear here.)

Section 2:

Index by Institution, with Contact Persons

The following index lists all libraries that responded to the survey in alphabetical order by name of institution. In cases where the library name and the name of the parent institution differ, the name of the parent institution is given first and used for the alphabetical arrangement. Please note that when an institution name begins with initials (example: J.V. Fletcher) or is printed in all capital letters (example: MIT), that institution is alphabetized at the beginning of the listing for the first letter of the name: thus, J.V. Fletcher comes before Jacob Edwards Library, and MIT comes before the MacDuffie School.

In addition to the name of the institution and/or library, a mailing address and the name of a contact person is given. If you would like more information about automation in a particular library, please contact the person specified for that library. If you need help in locating a specific institution, address inquiries to the BLC.

Section 3:

Index by Library Type

The following index lists the responding libraries grouped according to general categories. The libraries have been divided into one of seven types:

ACADEMIC-PR Privately-Supported Academic Institutions

ACADEMIC-PU Publicly-Supported Academic Institutions

PUBLIC Publicly-Supported Municipal Libraries

SCHOOL Public and Private Secondary-Level Schools

SPEC/ACAD-PR Special Collections (not the main library) in Privately-Supported Academic Institutions

SPEC/ACAD-PU Special Collections (not the main library) in Publicly-Supported Academic Institutions

(Specialized collections in academic institutions are included in ACADEMIC-PR or ACADEMIC-PU if the institution as a whole instructs in a specialized subject area.)

SPECIAL Special Libraries of Profit or Non-Profit Status not included above

Categories have been determined on the basis of the above criteria as well as from the various mailing lists which were used to disseminate the original survey instrument.

This index is provided to facilitate the comparison of data within libraries of the same type. If you would like to see which other libraries in your general category have computerized various functions, you should locate the names of comparable libraries within the appropriate category. Note the municipality within which the library lies. Then turn to Section 1: Automated Functions by Municipalities and find the correct municipality and the selected library within that municipality. Automated functions can then be determined from the matrix. If more information is desired about the comparable library, you may also consult Section 2: Index by Institution, with Contact Persons to determine the address of the library and the person to whom a letter of inquiry could be sent.

November 24, 1982

Dear Librarian:

The Board of Library Commissioners last surveyed automation practices in Massachusetts libraries in 1978. Since that time there has been a dramatic increase in the number of libraries that have access to computers due to increased participation in resource sharing and the development of better library systems by commercial vendors. In addition, the surge of interest in microcomputers as a low-cost alternative for smaller libraries and for specific uses in larger libraries prompts us to find out just which Massachusetts libraries are using computers in their operations.

Please take a few minutes of your time to fill out the enclosed questionnaire and return it to the Board by December 15.

Information developed from this survey will become part of an integrated database running on the BLC's microcomputer system. Summary reports will be made available to the library community on a continuing schedule. Additionally, BLC staff will be able to respond quickly to questions such as:

> What other libraries of our size have automated their circulation system?
> What off-the-shelf software can be recommended for use on our Apple to print a newspaper index?
> We're having trouble hooking up our terminal for on-line searching, and the database vendor can't seem to help. Doesn't anyone else use this CRT to search DIALOG?

A sample questionnaire filled out by "Superlibrary" has been included to indicate the extent and format of the response we are looking for. If you have questions concerning interpretation of the survey questions, please call Susan Bjørner at the Board. Thank you for your help in supplying this information.

Sincerely,

Susan N. Bjørner

Appendix B: For More Information...

The "Autosurv" database used to store data from the 1982-83 survey of computer use in Massachusetts libraries has been constructed to allow searching of the results by any of several information fields. The database runs on the dBASE II program; each record consists of several fields which combine to structure the following information:

Name of Institution, including name of library
Location
Contact Person
Library Type
Status: Automated or Not-automated
Function Fields: 12 specified library functions, plus the miscellaneous "Other" category, each of which includes information on the hardware and software used to perform that particular function, if automated.
Consortium: what group(s), if any, with which a library shares computer use.
Future: what plans, if any, a library has to begin or extend automation projects within a year.

Searches can be performed using any of these criteria. If you would like more information than is supplied in the accompanying report, call or write the BLC to discuss your search parameters.

Some examples of individual searches that have been performed are:

* What libraries have access to the Lexis database?
* List the libraries that are using TRS-80 microcomputers in any library operations.
* Which libraries produce in-house databases using mini or microcomputers?
* List the public libraries in the Eastern Region which have access to microcomputers and tell what software they have to run on them.

You may also photocopy and use the form on the reverse to request a search of "Autosurv."
